ACADEMIC BACKGROUND

PhD | 1 October 2016 – 21 July 2022 – Doctor Degree in Psychology from the Faculty of Psychology and Education Sciences of University of Porto (FPCEUP). PhD Dissertation title "The other side of the coin: Contributions for preventing and countering Islamist radicalisation". European Doctorate under supervision of Isabel R. Pinto, Marta Pinto and Peter Neyroud.

Through a mixed methodology (qualitative studies, quantitative study, and a systematic review), this thesis proposes to make contributions for the field of radicalisation and deradicalisation. Thus, one study analyses all the literature produced in the field of deradicalisation from Islamist-inspired terrorism, another one analyses the pathways and the psychosocial processes of radicalisation of a group of 6 Portuguese men who became radicalised in London, and, finally, the last two studies aim to study why there is not violent radicalisation in Portugal. For this, one study was exploratory and followed the methodology proposed by ethnographies to search some of these reasons within the Muslim community, and another one – quantitative - analyses the context in which the Portuguese foreign fighters were born (Portugal) and the context in which they became radicalised (England).

The PhD thesis defence occurred on 21 July 2022 and the examiners were Professor Peter Neumann, From King's College London, Professor Mariana Barbosa, from Portuguese Catholic University of Porto, and Professor Alexandra Oliveira, from Faculty of Psychology and Educational Sciences of University of Porto.

SOCIAL MEDIA CONTRIBUTIONS

Since 2020 I have been appearing on the Portuguese media to talk about violent extremism, radicalisation and deradicalisation. I have been interviewed by tv channels, such as CNN Portugal, SIC, RTP, and by relevant Portuguese newspapers, such as Público, Diário de Notícias and Expresso. Currently, I am a columnist for the Portuguese weekly news magazine Sábado.

I was also a co-host of a weekly podcast on international politics, called Desordem Mundial (World Disorder), integrated in Público, from June 2022 and September 2023.
